The Disaster Attributed to Carelessness of Contractors.

(SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.)
CINCINNATI, O., June 16.—The bodies of all but seven of the victims of the bridge disaster at Covington, Ky., have taken out of Licking River, and all but one of the twenty-two corpses now at the Morgue have been identified. The bodies of the missing seven are supposed to he buried under the iron work of the bridge at the bottom of the river. These are the names of the missing:

Martin Luther, La Grange, Kr.
Frank Mure, Newport, head carpenter.
George Burse, Covington.
N. W. Burton, Winchester, Kr.
William Wesling, Newport.
Fred Brant, 48 Main street, Cinciunati
Dick Adam, Cinciunati.

William Burton, Fendleton, Ky.
Patrick Murray, Green Brier, W. Va.

The injured men one and all agree that the disaster is attributable to the desire of the contractors to hurry the bridge to completion. The piling upon which the platform of false work was creeted had not been driven deep enough into the muddy bottom of the river to render them secure, and when the attempt was made to put in place the heavy iron beams which were to span the river the extra weight caused the raise work to go to pieces.

One of the injured men asserts that the likelihood of some such disaster happening had been pointed out to the contractors, and that the latter simply laughed at the fears expressed by the men. Both of the contractors have suffered death for their carelessness. disparer is attributable to the desire of the
